Wedding Festivities Disturbed by Charivari Last Night

Reception to Mr. and Mrs. George Peberl in Elliott Street Almost Made a Failure by Mock Serenaders—Suggestion to Clean Out Racket Makers Not Acted Upon.

With forty wedding guests inside the house and as many intruders outside, with all the pans and horns that they could muster, a merry reception was given to Mr. and Mrs. George Peberl at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Stadelman, No. 404 Elliott street, last night. Mrs. Stadelman is the bride's sister.

The bride in her wedding finery was distracted and kept close to her newly made protector, wincing every time a blast of a horn came through the open shutters. As fast as the blinds were closed they were forced open. Some of the guests, who said their heads were splitting, suggested that the police be sent for, but the hostess refused to thus disgrace her neighbors.

Then the bridegroom hit on the idea of giving the disturbers something to eat, but the hostess said that she did not intend to work like a horse and then give it to a lot of loafers. "Let's soak 'em with water," said another but no one ventured. So the racket kept up until the participators became weary of their exertions and quietly faded away.

The marriage of George Peberl, son of John Peberl, of No. 626 Butternut street, and Miss Mary Netzband, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Netzband of Rome, took place at the School of the Assumption Convent in North Salina street yesterday morning at 9 o'clock. The bridegroom's brother, Rev. William Peberl of Camden, was the officiating priest. The witnesses were Miss Rose Netzband, a sister of the bride, and Carl Miller.

The bride wore white Japanese silk, a tulle veil and a bouquet of carnations finishing the costume. Her attendant wore white mull and carried pink carnations.

The rooms of the house where the reception took place were decorated with potted plants, a strand of blue and white ribbons formed the canopy to the table, which held a large bowl of carnations and a handsomely decorated wedding cake.

After a wedding trip in the East Mr. and Mrs. Peberl will live in this city. Among the guests were: Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Netzband, Mr. and Mrs. George Smith, Miss Nancy Theirfelder, Rome; Mr. and Mrs. Ira Spellman, Oneida, Miss Alvira Stemmer, Mrs. Roehm, Miss Mary Stemmer and Mrs. L. Eigner, Utica; John Peberl, Miss Mary Peberl, Mr. and Mrs. Leo Rohlbrenner, Syracuse.
